Description

This book explores the latest research and theory on leadership and group work in the context of indigenous and environmental social justice. It features contributions from leading scholars and practitioners in the field, and provides a unique perspective on the challenges and opportunities facing these important areas of social work.

The book is divided into four parts:

1. Leadership in Indigenous and Environmental Social Justice
2. Group Work in Indigenous and Environmental Social Justice
3. Case Studies in Indigenous and Environmental Social Justice
4. Emerging Directions in Indigenous and Environmental Social Justice

Each part includes a mix of theoretical and practical chapters, providing a comprehensive overview of the field.

This book is essential reading for anyone interested in leadership and group work in the context of indigenous and environmental social justice. It is also a valuable resource for students, practitioners, and policymakers working in these areas.

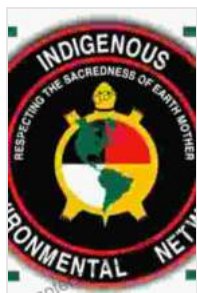

Reviews

"This book is a groundbreaking contribution to the field of social work. It provides a much-needed critical analysis of the challenges and opportunities facing indigenous and environmental social justice work, and offers a vision for a more just and equitable future." -Dr. Winona LaDuke, Executive Director of Honor the Earth

"This book is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the complex issues facing indigenous and environmental social justice work. The authors provide a comprehensive overview of the field, and offer a powerful call to action for social workers and other change agents." -Dr. Roxanne Dunbar-Ortiz, Professor Emerita of History at the University of California, Berkeley
